CatIQ: $479.1 Million in Industry Losses in Canada From Hurricane Fiona

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia - Canadian insurers incurred an estimated C$660 million ($479.1 million) in losses from Hurricane Fiona, making it the second record-setting event for carriers this year, according to Catastrophe Indices and Quantification Inc., under license to the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

Fiona is most-costly extreme weather event ever recorded in Atlantic Canada and the 10th-largest event for carriers in Canada, CatIQ and the IBC said in a statement.

CatIQ said insured damages were greatest in Nova Scotia, with initial estimated damages exceeding C$385 million after numerous large trees fell on cars and buildings and extensive flooding, roof wind damage, storm surge and power outages occurred.

Fiona on Sept. 24 extensively impacted all of Prince Edward Island, it said, which saw C$220 million in insured losses.

Large losses were estimated in New Brunswick, with more than C$30 million; Quebec, more than C$11 million; Newfoundland and Labrador, more than C$7 million.

Southwestern Newfoundland was particularly hard hit, CatIQ and the IBC said, with at least 20 houses washed into the ocean, primarily in Port aux Basques.

Fiona caused losses in the Caribbean and Canada and is one of three cat events in September that Cresta is investigating with potential losses in excess of $1 billion. The other events were typhoons Hinnamnor and Nanmadol in Asia (BestWire, Oct. 4, 2022).

Insurance claims from severe weather have more than quadrupled across Canada since 2008, the IBC said, with annual losses from catastrophes reaching C$2 billion. Eight of the country's largest losses for insurers have taken place since 2013. Of that total two hit the country this year – Fiona and a deadly derecho that traveled across Ontario and Quebec on May 21.

CatIQ estimated Canadian insurers likely incurred more than C$875 million in losses from the derecho, or the sixth-largest loss for the industry (BestWire, June 16, 2022).

The IBC said it continues to advocate for governments to “act on the urgent need to do more to prioritize investments that build resilience and better protect families and communities from a changing climate.

Fiona impacted many residents in high-risk flood areas and floodplains where residential flood insurance coverage is not available, the IBC said, therefore the overwhelming majority of costs will fall to the government.

Australia Floods Declared an Insurance Catastrophe With 6,350 Claims So Far

SYDNEY - Ongoing flooding in Australia's Victoria, Tasmania and New South Wales regions was upgraded to an insurance catastrophe from a significant event, said the Insurance Council of Australia.

As of Oct. 19, insurers received 6,350 claims related to floods across Victoria, New South Wales and Tasmania, the ICA said in a statement.

The new declaration to an insurance catastrophe comes as the three regions are hit by severe weather and flooding that has occurred since Oct. 12, the ICA said. The declaration reflects the growing severity of the floods and further extreme weather expected.

Insurance Australia Group Ltd. received 1,546 claims due to the heavy rain and floods, with the majority of claims received from Rochester, Seymour, Maribyrnong, Nagambie and Heathcote in Victoria, it said in an Oct. 18 statement.

As of Oct. 17, Suncorp Group Ltd. received about 1,000 claims, the majority in Victoria, as a result of widespread rain and flooding, the insurer said in a statement (BestWire, Oct. 17, 2022). The numbers are expected to increase over the coming days as the situation continues to unfold, it said at the time.

Floodwaters are expected to peak across three river systems in Victoria on Oct. 19 – the Murray, Goulburn and Campaspe, putting thousands of homes and businesses at risk, the ICA said. Citing forecasters, it said areas in northern Tasmania and in western New South Wales are also at risk of further flooding in the coming days.

The impact of the flooding has been most significant in Victoria but the declaration covers all claims related to the ongoing severe weather and flooding across the three impacted states, the ICA said.

It said its catastrophe declaration escalates and prioritizes the insurance industry's response for affected policyholders.

Under the catastrophe declaration, claims from affected policyholders will be given priority by insurers; claims will be triaged to direct urgent assistance to the worst-affected property owners; ICA representatives will be mobilized to work with local agencies and services and affected policyholders as soon as emergency services say it is safe to do so; and insurers will mobilize disaster response specialists to assist affected customers with claims and assessments as soon as emergency services say it is safe.

An industry task force has been established to identify and address issues arising from this catastrophe, the ICA said

It has been a week since the severe weather hit the south-eastern states of Australia and the severity of that rainfall continues to impact river systems which are now beyond capacity, the ground is soaked and there is nowhere for the flood waters to go," said ICA Chief Executive Officer Andrew Hall in a statement.

Florida Risk Professor Suggests State/Federal Insurance Programs to Stabilize Troubled Homeowners Market

Battered by storms and fraud, Florida might need state or federal insurance programs to stabilize its homeowners market, according to Florida State University Associate Professor of Risk Management Chuck Nyce.

One option could be a federal backup akin to the federal Terrorism Risk Insurance Act, he said.

Another way to address homeowners rates that are triple the national average would be to adopt a means-testing program to subsidize the cost for working-class residents in high-hazard, but not beachfront areas, said Nyce.

Or the state could assume all wind risk until insurance fraud can be brought under control, a role he said insurer-of-last-resort Citizens Property Insurance Corp. is increasingly filling.

"The short answer is there is no simple solution" to market conditions that saw six insolvencies pre-Hurricane Ian and is likely to see more in the wake of the powerful storm, Nyce said. Karen Clark & Co. on Oct. 3 estimated the industry has incurred $63 billion in losses from Ian (BestWire, Oct. 3, 2022).

The Insurance Information Institute estimates that $10 billion to $20 billion of the cost to insurers will come from litigation expenses, in part because of the low rate of homes insured against flood losses, said spokesman Mark Friedlander. In a state wrapped on three sides by "two of the largest bodies of water in the world," he said the take-up rate for residential flood insurance – primarily through the National Flood Insurance Program – is just 18%. (BestWire, Oct. 7, 2022).

Erin Collins, National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies senior vice president of state and policy affairs, said any solutions in Florida most need to address risk reduction and the removal of “reckless costs from the system.”

“On top of the actual catastrophe risk, scams, fraud and litigation are not ancillary problems in Florida,” said Collins, citing III homeowners statistics showing that 9% of U.S. homeowners claims are filed in Florida but 81% of litigated claims originate in the state.

Citizens will likely exceed its projected enrollment of 1.5 million next year, which would exceed the enrollment record of 1.48 million set at Citizens in 2012. With 1.1 million policies currently on the books – an increase from a low of 419,475 in November 2019 – Citizens estimates it currently writes about 13% of the Florida homeowners market. “As our policy count grows and our exposure grows, the risk of having to levy assessments and surcharges increases following a major storm,” said Citizens spokesman Michael Peltier.

Nyce said enrollment could pass 2 million within the next two years, giving it a 20% or even 25% market share, particularly because in some areas of the state Citizens is less expensive than private coverage.

If Citizens took on all homeowners risk coverage, it would have better leverage in the reinsurance market. “We’re headed that way anyway” with Citizens enrollment climbing for all-risk, said Nyce. However, he suggests the move as a short-term solution only.

Peltier said any changes to Citizens structure would fall to state legislators or the state Office of Insurance Regulation.

In the interim, Nyce said would like to see legislators and regulators address the abusive claims practices in Florida. Policyholders should retain the ability to sue an insurer, but he said the one-way attorney fees statutes in Florida need restrictions that would disincentivize attorneys from getting involved in claims, maybe by capping fees at a certain percentage.

Nyce acknowledged political impediments. “The plaintiff’s bar is a very powerful lobby,” he said, and many homeowners have come to view high premiums as a roof replacement plan.

And the idea of a backstop wind insurer could prove unpopular: “It’s not a free option. There’s a political risk,” Nyce said.

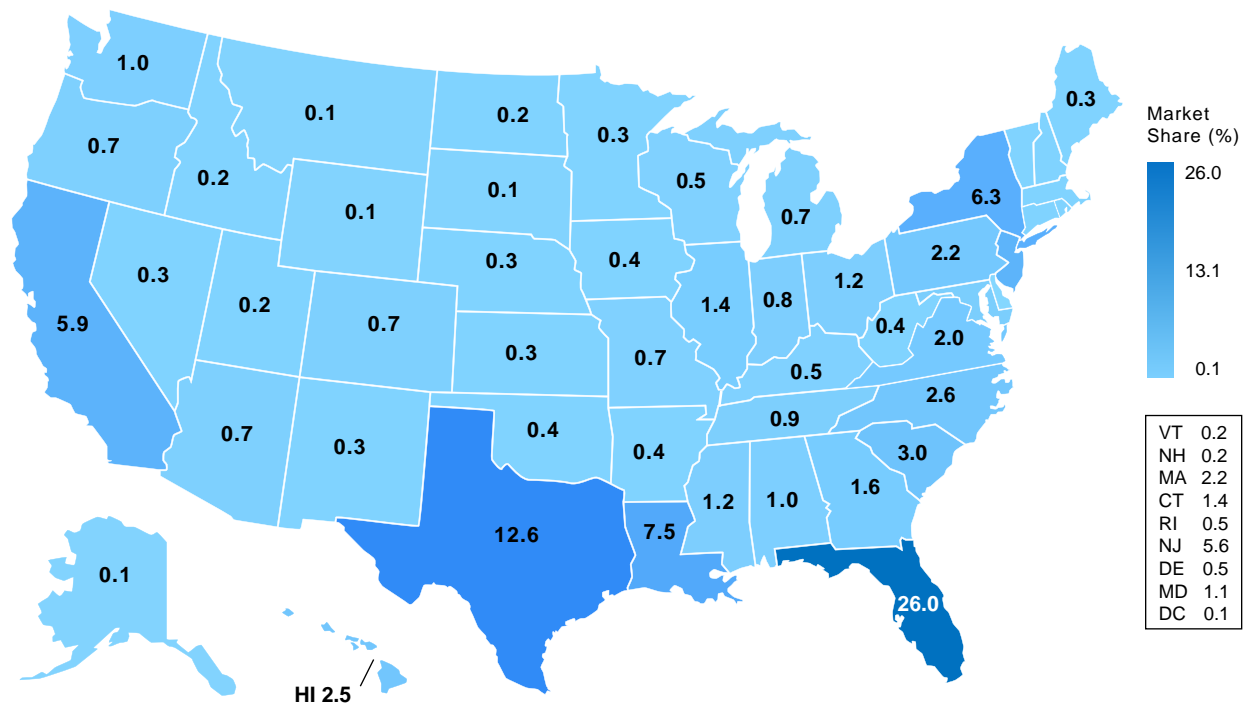

Earlier this year, then-U.S. Rep. Charlie Crist, a Democrat who seeks to reclaim his earlier role as Florida’s governor, filed H.R. 7643, the Fueling Affordable Insurance for Homeowners Act. It would provide a federal solution for catastrophic losses by issuing loans to state insurance commissioners for insurance costs over a pre-specified threshold. The goal is similar to the TRIA: to stabilize the homeowners insurance market in Florida and other areas where reinsurance costs have risen (BestWire, May 6, 2022).

Nyce noted when Crist was governor in 2007, he rolled back Citizens rates and set in motion a system that still affects the market in Florida.

To stem the growth of exposure, Nyce said he thinks Florida could require anyone constructing a home to show proof of insurability by a private insurer prior to receiving a building permit. Then he admits public entities don’t want to stifle growth because it’s their economic engine. Nor do they want to rezone at-risk property, because it would reduce wealth.

“Making increasingly smarter decisions about how and where to build is essential,” Collins said at NAMIC. “This means leveraging science and experience by adopting up-to-date building codes as well as taking a serious look at avoiding especially vulnerable locations for building and rebuilding.”

“There will be a time to look at the public policy issues to improve the state’s property insurance market and rebuild more resilient homes and communities” but those conversations will on hold until carriers deal with the immediacy of Ian claims, said Logan McFaddin, American Property Casualty Insurance Association vice president of state government relations.

“Even without fraud we still have a wind problem Florida is a peninsula sticking out into the wind” and people keep moving there, Nyce said. For now the absence of a state income tax has made the higher insurance bills a wash. But if the average bill doubles to about $10,000 a year, perceptions could change, he added.

An insurance professor from Indiana proposed an expansion of TRIA when the COVID-19 pandemic struck in 2020. Zachary S. Finn, then-clinical professor and director at the Davey Risk Management & Insurance Program, Lacy School of Business, Butler University, said the combination of two uncorrelated perils in a risk pool should reduce the standard deviation around future projected losses, ultimately providing a more efficient risk relief valve for the economy (BestWire, March 20, 2020).

The top five writers of homeowners multiperil insurance in Florida in 2021, based on direct premiums written, were: Universal Insurance Holdings Group, with a 10.48% market share; Citizens Property Insurance Corp., 10.16%; State Farm Group, 6.67%; Tower Hill Group, 5.18%; and Progressive Insurance Group, 4.36%, according to BestLink.

Best’s Commentary: Hurricane Fiona-Related Insured Losses Depend on Recovery and Resilience

AM Best expects insured losses from Hurricane Fiona in the countries hit hardest to date—Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic—to be influenced by the duration of business interruptions due to power losses, but ultimately manageable for affected carriers.

According to the Best’s Commentary, “Hurricane Fiona Insured Losses Depend on Recovery and Resilience,” the top 10 insurers in Puerto Rico account for more than 90% of the market share for the auto, fire and allied lines, homeowners/farmowners and commercial multi-peril (property) lines. Two of these groups are extremely well-diversified, multinational insurers, but six of those top 10 companies are insurers with 100% of their exposure concentrated in Puerto Rico, representing approximately 43% of the market share for the aforementioned lines of coverage most at risk for sizable claim activity.

“It could take some time for claims adjusters in Puerto Rico to assess and estimate damages,” said David Blades, associate director, industry research and analytics. “However, since Hurricane Maria in 2017, insurance companies on the island have taken significant action to manage their risk profiles better by tightening underwriting guidelines, sharpening risk management techniques, improving pricing and getting significant rate increases. Furthermore, most losses will be flood-related and not covered by a standard homeowner policy. Those losses would fall under the National Flood Insurance Program.”

The Dominican Republic experienced widespread flooding and property damage, with popular tourist destinations left without electricity. However, a large part of the insurance portfolio is concentrated near Santo Domingo, the country's capital, with less distribution in the regions where a greater impact from the hurricane is expected.

California Governor Signs Bills Promoting Heat, Flood and Fire Risk Mitigation

SACRAMENTO, Calif. - California Gov. Gavin Newsom has signed bills co-sponsored by Insurance Commissioner Ricardo Lara that promote climate-change resilience and a better warning system for residents affected by prolonged heat waves.

Newsom signed S.B. 852, led by state Sen. Bill Dodd, that will allow cities, counties or special districts, either alone or in combination, to establish climate resilience financing districts. Through those districts, communities can undertake projects to address climate change including wildfire, sea level rise, extreme heat and cold, drought, flooding, and related matters, Dodd said.

The districts will be able to raise revenue through tax increment funding, voter-approved supplemental property taxes, property benefit assessments or fees.

The law requires that no more than 5% of the project revenues be used for administration, and annual audits that are open to public inspection.

"Today we take a significant step toward confronting the numerous challenges posed by our rapidly changing climate," Dodd said in a statement. "This new law will make our state safer and more resilient because it helps communities take direct action on problems most relevant to their region."

Gov. Gavin Newsom
California

Lara said in a statement the measure represents "a major step towards reducing community-wide risks" by mitigating the impact of catastrophes before they occur.

SB 852 grew from a recommendation from the California Insurance Department's first-ever climate insurance report that he led, Lara said.

Also emerging from the report was AB 2238, which will create the nation's first statewide ranking and early warning system for heat waves. The idea of ranking heat waves was first proposed by Lara and the California Climate Insurance Working Group.

"I represent communities that are disproportionately bearing the brunt of extreme heat weather events," said Assembly member Luz Rivas, an author of the new law, in a statement. "Climate change is impacting all Californians in different ways."

While climate change is escalating sea level rise along our wealthier and cooler coastal communities, it is also driving extreme heat in our lower income inland communities.”

Heat waves are responsible for more deaths than all other extreme weather events, and disproportionately impact communities of color, persons with disabilities, seniors, and low-income communities, AB 2238 said.

Insurance companies must be one element in the battle against climate change, and all parties must put low-income and isolated communities – those most vulnerable to the effects of extreme weather events caused by climate change – at the center of solutions, members of the climate insurance working group said (BestWire, July 1, 2022).

The new measure directs the CDI to study the costs of extreme heat waves and the insured and uninsured costs related to past extreme heat waves to identify insurance gaps and promote more effective risk communication and planning, it said.

The statewide heat wave ranking system will be in place by Jan. 1, 2025, it said.

Attempts to obtain comment from property/casualty insurance trade groups were not immediately successful.

The top five writers of homeowners multiperil insurance in California in 2021, based on direct written premiums, were: State Farm Group, 19.41% market share; Farmers Insurance Group, 14.8%; Allstate Insurance Group, 6.41%; CSAA Insurance Group, 6.35%; and Liberty Mutual Insurance Cos., 6.19%, according to BestLink.

WSIA Flood Panel: Climate Change, Delayed Infrastructure Create New Flood Risks

A panel of industry experts at the 2022 WSIA Annual Marketplace in San Diego discussed rising frequency of flooding, underwriting and pricing, changing distribution, communication and an overview of FEMA's Risk Rating 2.0.

John Weber: FEMA overhauled its Flood Insurance Program last year, hoping to get more homeowners to purchase flood insurance, but has that happened? I'm John Weber for AM Best TV, and we're at the WSIA conference in San Diego.

We have a terrific panel today who will be discussing that and other flood insurance topics. They are John Dickson, president, Aon Edge, Craig Poulton, CEO, Poulton Associates, and Christa Nadler, area executive vice president, RPS. Christa, let's start with you. How is flood risk changing?

Christa Nadler: That's a big question. The easiest answer is we're seeing changes in the climate. It's hard to turn on the TV these days and not see some sort of flooding happening across the country. Certainly, that has caused some changes. The frequency of flooding feels like it's certainly ramped up a little bit.

Flood risk is also changing due to outside factors. What we've seen a lot is there are cities, or towns, or villages that are delaying infrastructure changes. Some of these delays in infrastructure changes are causing that storm water to run off in places that maybe we didn't expect.

Christa Nadler

Craig Poulton: I would also add to that that there continues to be billions of dollars built where they shouldn't be located. We're placing a lot of structures in the way of flooding. I would posit we are aware of it, but we're ignoring it.

John Weber: With these changes, John, how is flood changing in as far as underwriting goes?

John Dickson: Christa hit right on it. The weather is changing, and so as the weather changes, the way that we approach this risk has to change. We're seeing storms that last further inland, hold their energy longer, travel thousands of miles to inundate metropolitan areas.

We had to constantly think about new ways to assess risk and manage risk. If we can think about risk through yesterday's lens, then we're going to continue to be caught unawares and our communities are going to be devastated.

We have to think about new technologies, new ways about distribution, communication, education, awareness. There's a massive insurance gap in the United States when it comes to flood insurance.

All of us here at this conference, listening to this panel, we have to think about new ways to understand risk, to price risk, to reach homes in different ways to better protect our communities.

Craig: John is right on the money. We are seeing, I believe that Christa and John would both agree with this, we're seeing a great deal more interest in doing exactly what John has outlined on the part of major insurers and reinsurers.

Christa: Historically, there's been this stigma, I suppose, around flood in saying, "I only need flood if I'm in a high-hazard zone. I only need flood if my mortgage company requires it." Because there have been these limits set by the NFIP, people think, "If I'm buying the maximum available, then I have enough."

We've seen inflation, we've seen increased costs of construction, and yet those limits have stayed the same. Like John said, we need to raise more awareness in saying maybe the only option is not just buying the maximum available at the NFIP.

Maybe we need more coverage, and we need to be able to diversify outside of people only buying flood coverage in the high-hazard zones to allow those insurers that are providing the coverage to offset some of their riskier flood accounts with some that are a little bit less risky.

John Weber: John, you mentioned distribution. Is that changing?

John Dickson: I think it is. As people engage with insurance in new ways, technology, buying commodities, products on your smart devices, on mobile devices, engaging with industry through different media, that does change the way distribution has to reach our customer.

It also changes the way that we can communicate risk. We talk constantly about change, but there are some constants, and Christa touched on a couple. One constant, water doesn't know to stop at these imaginary boundaries that we draw on maps.

Another constant, floods continue to happen. If we're mindful of these constants while we're keeping our eyes on the changes, particularly changes with how we communicate in purchasing tendencies and how consumers want to absorb and consume products, we can make some headway. A lot of work remains, however.

Craig: When we talk about distribution, we can't not intone flood maps, as John just referenced. The distribution system overlays the flood map, which the NFIP has made a horizontal construct. Flood maps are a vertical construct.

The US flood map should be a series of pin dots on low-lying structures that are near enough water to be flooded or near enough to the sky to receive [laughs] enough rain to be flooded. It would be a large number of pins. To draw a horizontal map to try and describe a vertical construct is doomed to failure.

Craig Poulton

CEO, Poulton Associates

50 percent, at least, of the structures that should be mapped in and be forced to buy flood insurance, if they have a mortgage through a federally insured institution, should be included in this distribution mechanism, but they're not. They aren't there. It's been proven time and time again.

The NFIP spent $15 million on advertising, I believe it was in 2016 or so, and didn't move the needle at all. You can't just tell people, "You need flood insurance," and they'll buy it. That's not how it works. They have to pretty much be forced into it in order to buy it in large numbers.

As John intoned, though, there will be, for example, homeowners' endorsements for folks that are not in significant danger of flooding will help a lot. Somebody somewhere has got to look at this flood map issue, which we've known about for years, and change it. We're not going to make much progress unless we do that.

John Weber: Craig, can you talk to us a little bit about Risk Rating 2.0, what that is, and what's going on with it?

Craig: Sure, I'd be happy to. Risk Rating 2.0 is FEMA's new rating methodology as opposed to, I'll call it 1.0. It's extremely well-thought-out, and they've had some great experts on their team to put it together. However, interestingly, the vast majority of NFIP Special Flood Hazard Area risks continue to have their risk rating 1.0 rate at renewal.

While Risk Rating 2.0 was absolutely a necessary to have the NFIP be able to fairly distribute a rate increase, which Congress told them they must do in 2012, they proceeded after 2012 to drop their rate instead of increase it, even though Congress mandated that they increase it. One of the reasons was they had no way to fairly distribute the rate.

John Dickson
President, Aon Edge

It was a randomly assigned rate prior to Risk Rating 2.0. Risk Rating 2.0 came in to the mix. Because of the way it's implemented, and I won't go into the technical aspects, but because of the way it's been implemented, a large number of what are called X-zone risk folks have exited the purchase of flood insurance through the NFIP.

A lot of them have gone to the private market, but very few, about half of folks can't get access to the private market through their current agent because they write with the WYOs only. Having this exodus of risks, they have not gone to the private market.

Risk Rating 2.0, very necessary, well-done, well-thought-out, not being implemented in its entirety, and not scheduled to get the full impact of the correct rate or the actuarial rate for 10 years. We've got some challenges.

I could go into all of the things I think NFIP could do, but I've talked long enough. [laughs] I'll let somebody else.

John Dickson: I love the last point that you made about the time it's going to take to get to that full risk rate. That's one of the biggest challenges with Risk Rating 2.0. The way that it's structured in Congress, the increases are capped, but the decreases are realized 100 percent.

That means that if someone is going to see 15 percent off of their rate, they see that today. If somebody is going to see a 20 percent increase, they only see a part of that today, and that inches in over time. We don't have time. We're running at a deficit. We have, again, a massive exposure in this country that needs to be closed.

We don't have 10 years to fix this. That's one of the biggest flaws with Risk Rating 2.0. I love the way you say it. It's a great concept. The execution could use a little work.

John Weber: What's going on with the NFIP?

John Dickson: The NFIP has an incredible mandate. You think about this is a government entity that's been charged to provide flood insurance to every home in the United States. It's an incredible undertaking. I also love where Craig started the conversation today.

If we continue to build structures where structured don't belong, the problems that we're talking about today will persist. The NFIP, in the execution of that mandate, has some ways fostered that behavior. They've encouraged that behavior, because you continue to get insurance, you continue to rebuild, and we see it time and again.

The NFIP insurance structure that's now being rebuilt for its fourth or fifth time. They buy insurance for a couple thousand dollars from the government, and then they get a new house every couple of years. That has to stop.

The NFIP needs to work through these challenges with homes not belonging where they are and repetitive loss structures. That would greatly improve the industry and our country.

Craig: On repetitive loss structures. I can't resist mentioning that the NFIP has taken every structure and taken it to the actuarial rate or below the old...Most of them have the old 1.0 rate. They don't take into account losses at all for repetitive loss structure. It's do-over time for repetitive loss structures.

When they have their first loss, then all of their prior losses come back to haunt the structure. Unfortunately, and I believe this is happening from anecdotal evidence, people who have repetitive loss properties are selling to people who don't know it's a repetitive loss property because the NFIP doesn't release the data.

In order to have a flood later on for the unsuspecting buyer, which will then find out it is repetitive loss property, and their premium will skyrocket, and they're the one left holding the financial bag, which should have been rightly borne by the prior owner who knew what they were selling.

It's almost like the government's complicit in a tricking device scheme. It's a sad thing for the folks who are going to buy those homes thinking they've got a beautiful home near the water, and then they find out that the premium is so high that they can't sell it for anything close to what they bought it for.

John Weber: Where's the flood market headed? Anyone's guess. Christa, would you like to venture a thought?

Christa: A year or two ago, we would have said, “All right, we think that we’re going to get more and more traction in the private flood market.” I think we have. It certainly makes sense to try to get more risks maybe out of the federal program and into the private market.

The delta in pricing and deductibles in the way that the business is underwritten remains so large that it’s going to take a long time. John touched on it, as did Craig. If you’re getting that rate increase over the course of 10 years, there’s never time for the private market to catch up.

The NFIP program, it serves a wonderful purpose, but it is still very underpriced compared to where the private market is. It’s hard to have that crystal ball to say where it’s going to be. I do think we’ll start to see more people trend towards the private market.

There are advantages to being in the private market, but the NFIP is obviously here to stay as well.

Craig: I’ll make one observation that’s germane to this, and that is that because the legacy rating system, 1.0, used the same rate in each flood zone, but the flood zone is not flat, it undulates. If I’m three feet above John, I deserve a lower rate than John, but I get the same rate.

Hence, that reality creates a random assignment of rate. 50 percent of the people in the old 1.0 assignment mechanism were getting a rate that was too high. That’s what we’ve been trafficking on for several years.

The private market is not always priced higher than the NFIP. Oftentimes, it can be lower, and reasonably so. With 2.0, hopefully that correlation becomes less and less pronounced. It’s still there.

We still have 50 percent of the people in NFIP, they’re paying, as John implied or outlined, the folks that should have gotten a lower rate, a lot of them have gotten a lower rate. 23 percent, I believe it was. There’s still a lot that are getting the old randomly assigned rate.

Christa: Essentially, what that does is the private market is coming in and they're being opportunistic. They're going to pick off those ones that are getting that much higher rate, despite maybe being built up a little bit higher, or whatever it may be. Then, it's a self-fulfilling prophecy that again, now, we leave the NFIP with only the absolute worst risks.

Craig: Hopefully.

Christa: Is that what we want? Is that not what we want? I don't know. It certainly will make a difference in the future if the NFIP is only doing those risks that are truly the ones that have the most flood exposure.

Craig: Till every insurance crisis gets fixed, insurer of last resort. Either that or assigned risk pool. If we can go down that road, and the NFIP will except a position of insurer of last resort, we're on our way to a solution.

John Dickson: When I think about the future of the flood insurance industry, one thing that strikes me that the private industry is showing, that flood insurance can work.

It is working, and maybe not with the velocity that we'd like, but we talk about lower pricing or higher pricing, everything that we're talking about with the NFIP is doing a Risk Rating 2.0, the investments that are happening in industry, better mapping resolution, better models, that doesn't make us price lower or higher.

It makes all of us price better. That's what's happening today. It's going to take some time, it's going to take education, it's going to awareness, it's going to take AM Best TV to get the message out. We are pricing flood insurance better today than we did yesterday, and we'll continue to do that.

Swiss Re: Global Insured Flood Losses Double to $80 Billion Over 10 Years

ZURICH - Global insured flood losses doubled during the decade ending in 2020 to $80 billion, compared with the prior 10-year period as populations, wealth and urbanization grew, according to Swiss Re Institute.

Insured losses have risen steeply despite low penetration rates. Swiss Re said in a report 82% of global flood economic losses were uninsured from 2011 through 2021.

Better data and risk mapping and modeling have improved the quantification of flood risk, said Swiss Re, and direct flood premiums have grown 20.5% annually since 2016 in the United States alone, compared with 1.8% growth through the National Flood Insurance Program.

The private insurance market offers expansive opportunity in a market estimated at $37 billion to $47 billion, Swiss Re said in citing Milliman research.

Climate change is ratcheting up the likelihood of high-intensity, heavy rain and short-duration flood events linked to tropical cyclones, it added in a new Economic Insights report. This year severe rainfall and floods have impacted homes and businesses outside typical floodplains globally, including areas of Australia, Europe, the United States, South Korea and South Africa.

“In a rapidly changing risk environment, there is a need for insurers to raise risk awareness among consumers and distribution partners, including agents and real estate brokers,” said Swiss Re.

Last year Hurricane Ida led the list of global natural catastrophes losses estimated at $105 billion and July floods in Germany, Belgium and nearby countries were the costliest natural disaster for the region in decades, Swiss Re said earlier. That was up from $90 billion in 2020 (BestWire, Dec. 14, 2021).

Republican Senators Offer One-Year NFIP Extension Bill

WASHINGTON — A group of Republican senators has released a proposal to extend the National Flood Insurance Program by one year.

Bill Cassidy, John Kennedy, Marco Rubio and Cindy Hyde-Smith introduced legislation to reauthorize NFIP, which now is authorized through Sept. 30.

Florida is home to 1.7 million NFIP policies, more than any other state, Rubio said in a statement.

“The National Flood Insurance Program is a lifeline for many Floridians,” he said. “We need to pass this legislation quickly so that no one experiences a lapse in coverage.”

Democratic Sen. Robert Menendez has already introduced a bill to extend the program an additional five years. He said his National Flood Insurance Program Reauthorization and Reform bill would put the program back on solid fiscal ground, and reframes the nation’s entire disaster paradigm to one that focuses more on prevention and mitigation in order to spare the high cost of rebuilding after flood disasters.

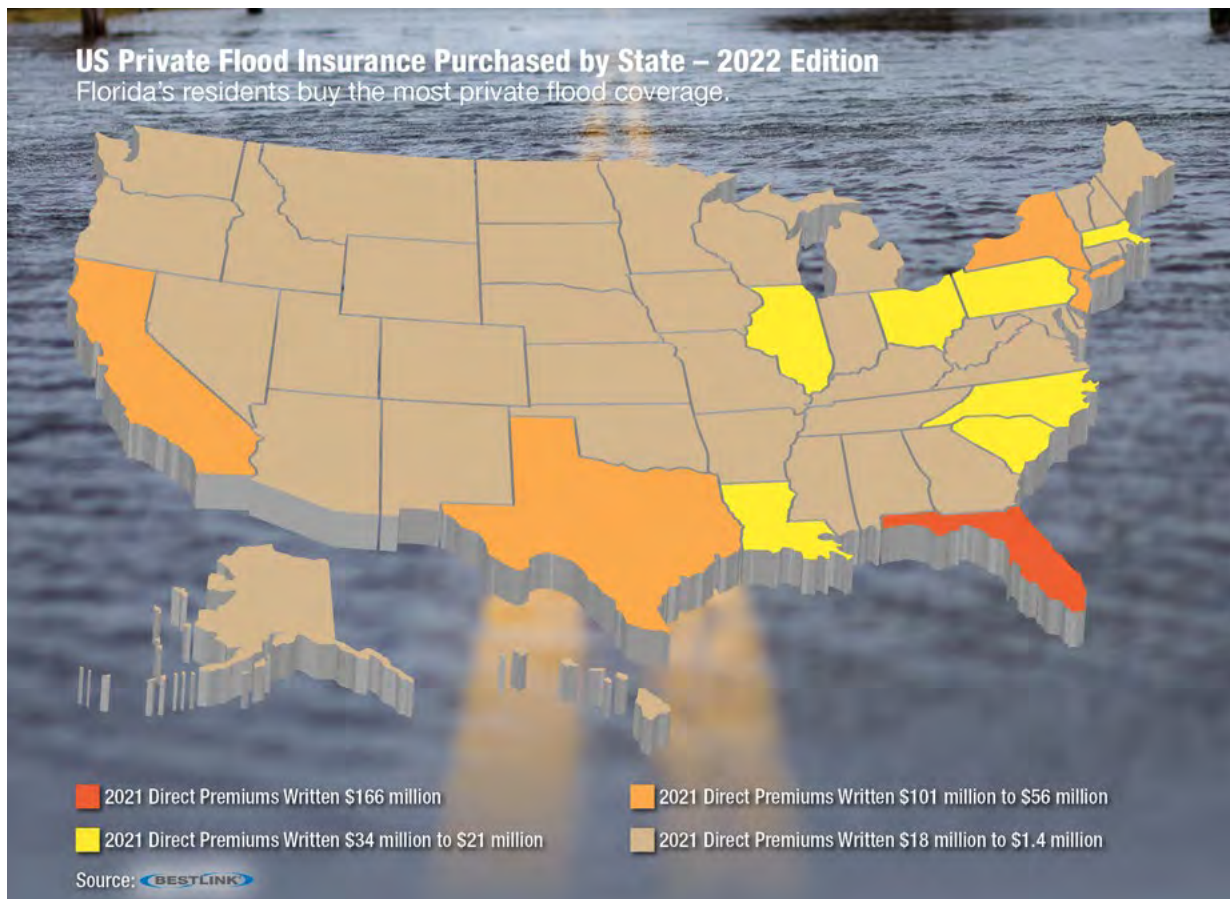

One thing the Democrat and Republicans have in common: They oppose Risk Rating 2.0.

Cassidy, of Louisiana, called the program “disastrous.”

Earlier this year, Cassidy released a statement on the Federal Emergency Management Agency acknowledging an internal study finding that the implementation of Risk Rating 2.0 to the NFIP could cause 20% of policyholders to drop out of the program due to higher premiums.

Menendez said he hears from FEMA and special interest groups “who are completely out of touch with disaster victims, that premiums need to be raised sky high on policyholders to bring down costs. But these calls to raise premiums foolishly ignore the fact that FEMA’s huge administrative costs should be reformed to provide premium savings.”

The Biden administration earlier this year gave Congress 17 proposals to reform the NFIP, including measures to end NFIP coverage to properties that repeatedly flood, prohibit new construction in flood-prone areas and require sellers and renters to make full disclosure of a property's flood history (BestWire, June 20, 2022).

The main property/casualty insurance trade groups, the American Property Casualty Insurance Association and the National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies support long-term extensions of the program.

In a position statement, NAMIC said it favors the shift toward risk-based rates, policies designed to increase private sector involvement in the program and provisions to address affordability, increase mitigation and address repetitive loss properties.

Flood Event Becomes Australia's Third-Largest Catastrophe Ever as Loss Estimate Rises to $3.33 Billion

SYDNEY - Severe flooding that hit Southeast Queensland and New South Wales in late February and early March is now Australia's third-costliest natural catastrophe ever, as estimated insurance losses rose to A$4.8 billion ($3.33 billion), up A$500 million within the last month, said the Insurance Council of Australia.

Nearly 225,000 insurance claims related to the event have been filed across both states, up 3.6% over the past month, the ICA said in a statement. Insured costs for the event rose 12% over the past month, driven in part by increasing materials and labor costs, the ICA said.

Nearly 30% of claims have been closed and A$1.5 billion has so far been paid to policyholders, the ICA said.

The previous loss estimate for the record-breaking floods was A$4.3 billion as the event became the country's fourth-costliest disaster, said the ICA at the time (BestWire, June 1, 2022). Claims for the event rose to 216,465 across both states, the ICA said in a statement at the time.

"The sheer scale of the extreme weather event that devastated Queensland and New South Wales is something we have never seen before, and the cost continues to rise," said ICA Chief Executive Officer Andrew Hall in the recent statement. "Money is flowing into these devastated communities with A$1.5 billion already paid and this number increasing every day."

Cyclone Tracy in 1974 and a 1999 Sydney hailstorm caused more insured losses, the ICA said in its earlier release. This year's east coast flood is the costliest flood in Australian history, it said.

Nearly 125,000 home claims resulted from the flood event, requiring local councils to prepare for an influx of development applications for the large number of property rebuilding and repairs required, the ICA said.

It has been four months since the ICA declared the event an insurance catastrophe, it said. According to the ICA, the four-month mark is significant as under Australia's General Insurance Code of Practice insurers are required to make a decision on a claim four months after it is lodged.

The event lasted several days and many claims were not made until days, weeks or months after the initial event, and locations such as Lismore were hit for a second time at the end of March, generating new or additional claims, the ICA said.

Perils AG earlier increased its loss estimated for a Feb. 20-March 11 series of floods to A$4.90 billion from A$3.99 billion (BestWire, June 9, 2022).

Ex-Federal Flood Insurance Administrator Says NFIP Reforms Needed to Fight Inflation and Debt

WASHINGTON - Now that it has implemented Risk Rating 2.0, Congress must enact further reforms of the National Flood Insurance Program to fight inflation and address the program's debt, the former executive director of the program told Congress at a recent hearing.

Roy Wright, speaking to the House Financial Services Subcommittee on Housing, Community Development and Insurance, said reforms haven't come easily, but they must continue. Inflation, in particular, will make rebuilding from a devastating flood more costly – a problem the federal government as a whole is addressing, he said.

Lawmakers, however, have a responsibility to fix coverage limits that have not changed since 1994, he said. Congress fixed that limit to $250,000, he said.

"Here is the impact of Congress's inaction: When hurricanes make landfall in the United States this year, Americans who did the right thing and bought flood insurance will learn the consequences of being underinsured," Wright said. "When the cost of rebuilding their home comes in at $370,000 and they only have $250,000 available in coverage, they will be underwater – for the second time."

Wright, who now is president and chief executive officer of the Insurance Institute for Business & Home Safety, said lawmakers should peg NFIP coverage limits to the Federal Housing Finance Agency's conforming load limits. That would allow homeowners to purchase coverage that is appropriate for their home, he said.

Inflation also will hit the program administration side of NFIP, he said.

"The debt held in the flood insurance program is about to get walloped by rising interest rates," Wright said. "While I know that there is no bipartisan legislative path today to resolve the outstanding debt, I must warn you – this will come back to haunt you, FEMA, and all those who depend on the NFIP

Roy Wright

President & CEO,
Insurance Institute for Business & Home Safety

for flood insurance. As interest rates rise, so too will interest payments on the residual $20.5 billion debt that FEMA owes to the Treasury Department.”

Because that interest is paid with premium revenue, less money is available to help homeowners as the interest rate rises, he said.

Wright said Risk Rating 2.0 is benefiting most policyholders, with a quarter paying a lower premium than before the program was implemented. For those who are struggling with the cost, caps on premium increases could be lowered, he added. Congress also could pump more funding into means-tested affordability programs, he said.

The one thing NFIP officials should not do is suggest that Risk Rating 2.0 will reduce a homeowner’s risk, especially in an age of climate change.

“You cannot say that the flood risk is growing and then expect the price of that risk to be cheaper,” Wright said. “That does not compute.”

Further, Wright said the Federal Emergency Management Agency should revise its home buyout program, which, because of its lengthy bureaucratic requirements, can cost the government more in rebuilding costs in flood-prone areas than buying the home outright.

Congress should support a recently introduced bill, the Protecting Families and the Solvency of the National Flood Insurance Program Act of 2022, which would allow FEMA to offer a buyout once it receives a catastrophic flood claim, he said.

Finally, lawmakers should pass a long-term reauthorization of NFIP – which has been reauthorized for the past six years in “21 small chunks” – to provide political stability, Wright said.

In February, FEMA said it would pay $61.2 million in premiums to transfer $450 million in NFIP risk to the capital markets via a series of sponsored catastrophe bonds (BestWire, Feb. 24, 2022).
